Your tired of a small town, want a big scene, its everything you could possibly need, they say that the city, it offers a lot, all of its value and all of its rot. Shes on her own and will give up her past, in turn he'll tell her how to make the most cash, the cops leave the block when they see pretty ones, you might as well let the boys have their fun. We lose a little more every day, can't stop the world from urban decay. Safe under street lights but lie in a room. Just stay away from the ones you dont know, home's just a mile but they make the calls don't stop if you want to get there at all. They are resilient from all they don't feel, give them a place, they'll make a deal. Just when you feel that all hope is lost, remember you have friends who will cook you some rocks. Who has a reason deep in their past, kids grow to men, turns out like trash. One's for appearance ones for the game, ones for approval it comes out the same. Whenever they tell you theres nothing to lose hear what they're saying, but watch what they do.
