splintered piece of glass falls in the seat and gets caught these broken windows, open locks, reminders of the youth we lost in trying so hard to look away from you we followed white lines to the sunset i crash my car everyday the same way

time to let this pass
(the time it takes, the time it takes to let go) time runs through our veins (it starts and stops and starts and stops again)
we don't stand a chance in this threadbare time
(the time it takes, the time it takes to let go)
staring at the setting sun no reason to come back again the twilight world in blue and white the needle and the damage done i don't want to feel this way forever a dead letter marked return to sender the broken watch you gave me turns into a compass its two hands still point to the same time 12:03 our last goodbye so push the seats back a little further i can see the headlights coming

roll the windows down and take a breath
they paint the world in red and broken glass

(the time it takes, the time it takes to let go)
(it starts and stops and starts and stops again)
we don't stand a chance in this threadbare time
(the time it takes, the time it takes to let go)

the spinning hubcaps set the tempo for the music of a broken window when the cameras on and the cameras click we open up the lens to broken glass and it's over in a flash i'll never understand understanding in a car crash
