"A Weekend Affair"

I simply never think of love

But the moment Friday night appears

I begin to.

She:

Tho' I always have lacked

The courage to speak

About the thing you're talking of

When the weekend comes I feel a longing

To sin too.

He:

Two brains with the same queer complex.

She:

Two hearts with a single urge,

Both:

It does seem rather fated

That we should merge.

Here we are, well matched and unattached,

In a spot beyond compare.

What a staging gor engaging

In a weekend affair.

When your system cries for exercise

And you're tired of city air
No distraction has the action
Of a weekend affair.
All through Saturday and Sunday
We can give romance a try
But the moment we awake
And see it's Monday,
"Goodbye."
And there after, when we meet again,
We'll exchange a stony stare.
What a chic end
To a weekend
Affair.
