"A Crime"

Do you remember when you broke into my heart?
When I surrendered, I let you turn me inside out.
We were better then, nothing could ever break our dreams
'Cause our love was bolder than a million thoughts of fear.

It's a crime, you have no right to pretend that we still
love.
And it's a crime to keep on lying that we are still in love.

Was it the winter? Didn't we close and lock our doors?
Was it a failure to think we were stronger than it all?
Suddenly strangers, how could we let it go this far?
It is no longer, no longer who we are.

It's a crime, you have no right to pretend that we still
love.
And it's a crime to keep on lying that we are still in love.

Love is no longer (who) we are.

It's a crime, you have no right to pretend that we still
love.
And it's a crime to keep on lying that we are still in love,
in love.
