

Fiery Furnaces, The "Here Comes The Summer"

Visit "Here Comes The Summer" on MotoLyrics.com

Last day in May, the afternoon: remember?
Black marks off charcoal from the dune: remember?
I thought it wouldn't be too soon; we'd wait at least until its June
The twenty-ninth of March it rained: remember?
You looked so sad that I explained: remember?
You knew it wouldn't be too soon; we'll have to wait until
its June

I've been waiting since I don't know when and now it
finally seems about to start.
I swear, I swear, that I will do my part
December dark at six o'clock: remember?
The freezing wind gives you a shock: remember?
You knew it wouldn't be too soon; we'll have to wait until
its June.

October damp on down the street: remember?
The sodden leaves stuck to your feet: remember?
You knew it wouldn't be too soon; we'll have to wait until
its June.

I've been waiting since I don't know when and now it
finally seems about to start.
I swear, I swear, that I will do my part.
July the third we stayed up late: remember?
And thought how long we'd have to wait: remember?

It'll be so long until it's soon; it'll be so long until its June

Visit Fiery Furnaces, The page on MotoLyrics.com, to get more lyrics and videos.