The Daughters' Father watches, quietly we assume He's no longer with us but he left this dusty room

And your name it's an honor
It's a shame but it's your honor
To take it on your shoulder
'til you can find another

[Chorus]
That's enough for now
He should have never left you broken
He should have held you
Things your Father never could do
That's enough for now
He would have never left you broken
He would have held you
Things your Father never told you

The century before me, never could turn 21
Years and years he waited, just watching for a son someone to go ahead, to take the name instead
Years and years he waited, then a daughter came instead

[Chorus]
But that's enough for now
He should have never left you broken
He should have held you
Things your Father never could do
That's enough for now
He would have never left you broken
He would have held you
Things your Father never told you

Breathing comes in pairs
Except for twice
One begins and one's goodbye

60 years of sorrow, you got 5 or 6 of bliss
Left my mothers' mother
Without so much as a kiss

As a kiss

[Chorus]

And that's enough for now
He never wanted to leave you broken
He would have held you
Things your father never could do
That's enough for now
I would have never left you broken
I would have held you
Things your father never could dooooo
Words your father never told you

60 years of sorrow, you got 5 or 6 of bliss
Left my Mothers' mother
Without so much as a kiss
