she's on the second floor with a window above her bed and she will look through the glass and wonder what it is she had missed

she will hide the bruises with her make up and her hair and she will look right at me with her see straight through me stare and it's over, with the look on her face you know it's over

and if she could be anywhere today, it would be yesterday

so many people don't get heard over the billboard noises

and she will stand with her friends and hope they notice,
hope they find out

she is looking to the stars, and she is looking for the sky, and she is wondering why

we live this long, and in the end there is only hearts and roads to find that it's over, with the look on her face, you know it's
