If a search has been long and futile and brutal And if you squint trying to recollect the bosom of your grown love
You reach out and into the absence and gasping
The vastness grasps you like an alien embrace Your face to its face
No end and neither beginning you're spinning You're breathless but o'er in a dark and hateful star an evil world

Where would I ever be without you?
How could I hope to seize the tablet of values and
redact it?
Foolish, I know but I'm about to die
about to die
about to die
about to die
about to die

Your life must surely be ending and trembling You realize you never lived a day at all (wait) and it's all your fault (wow)
It all seems unspeakably vile and while you wretch the memory of all you understood The vandal laughs into his hood (ha ha ha)

Where would I ever be without you?
How could I hope to seize the tablet of values and
redact 'em?
Foolish, I know but I'm about to die
about to die
about to die
about to die

Look there the goblin's dressed up like a wound Mutants all vagrant and hateful Look there the mirror lies distant staring vacant and glaring pronouncing your name

'bout to die
'bout to die
about to die

about to die
about to die

Where would I ever be without you?
How could I hope to seize the tablet of values and
redact it?
Foolish, I know but I'm about to die
about to die
about to die
about to die

You're already dead
You're already dead
but you're about to die
