Saw her at the counter of the all night cafe in the early morning hour she looked so out of place

Dressed in lace and linen she was as of light looked across the table with a question on her face

A feeling within told me this could lead to something wrong
she begged of me to come along and I heard the echos of a song

It's got me turning-round and round and round and round around
It's got me turning-round and round and round and

Raised the cup of coffee to her ruby lips and shot an arrow through me with those emerald eyes gave me the directions to her hideaway but she didn't tell me about the danger there

A feeling within told me this could lead to something
wrong
she begged of me to come along
and I heard the echos of a song

round around
It's got me turning-round and round and round and

It's got me turning-round and round and round and
round around
It's got me turning-round and round and round and
round around

A feeling within told me this could lead to something
wrong

It's got me turning-round and round and round and

It's got me turning-round and round and round and

It's got me turning-round and round and round and

It's got me turning-round and round around

It's got me turning-round and round and round and round and round and round and round and round and round and round and round ...
