Assuming you know someone, someone that you'll never know
You're quick to pass judgment to make yourself feel less alone
It's hard to hate someone that really you feel sorry for Your actions like gravity, will soon come knocking on your door

And when you look at him read between the lines
I know that what you see, isn't what you'll find And in your presence his restraint has got you blind, he seems unaware
A quiet, harmless, thoughtless, dork-like kind of guy
I know that's all the man that you'd expect to find Will shed his cover and reveal himself to you

He's in control and he'll find the time to care
He'll find the time to give a damn
At your expense you will pay the man
It's on again but with a different trend
Cause this time he's gained control

Another story is changing, another lie rearranging
Every time he sees your face there is aching
Just another feeling he's got to control

But his faith will keep him all right Belief in common sense, to know what's wrong from right
I know he's seen and felt the repercussions of A thoughtless, heartless verbal bout.

But his faith will keep him all right
Belief in common sense and he won't have to pray He'll have his day. And in the end he'll walk away

Now everyone around you is grown but you've remained
It seems you're satisfied to live a life of shame
And now you've got yourself convinced everyone else is wrong, you stand alone

He's up against a mind that thinks just of himself
A mind in disarray, a mind in need of help
As frustration grows and almost gets the best of him
He stops and thinks, he sits back and gains control

But his faith will keep him all right, belief in common sense
It will keep him on his way, will keep him safe
Will keep him proud, will keep him in control
