A hard wind blows from the east now-a-days
But the weather man says it's not gonna rain at all But everybody knows when the white clouds turn to grey
A hard rain is liable to fall

The paper says there's one million dead
The garbage man says that's old news as he watch the paper shred
The TV host with his reassuring smile
Saying things'll all be fine after awhile

People sayin' stay out of the sun and rain
The air we breathe is turning into smog
If everybody thinks that their way's the only way Weather man says a heavy chance of fog

Cause people keep on sayin' what they'll say Cause everything's got a side to see from every different way
And the people keep on doin' what they'll do Cause all you've done is what you do by the time the day is through
And the TV host with his reassuring smile Sayin' things'll all be fine after awhile

After all is said and saying things is out of date What's left to do but find the true in the things that as of late
Have fallen to the wayside of the things that we have said
Which meant so much more to us than all the things in our own heads

Cause what's a man to do when all he's seen Has all been laid before his eyes and written like a dream
And what's a man to do when all he's done
Is all history that's been done by everyone
And if the weather man says a heavy chance of rain
It don't mean the rain won't pour on just the same.
