And i never drank alcohol and i never got high it was the end of a hundred years that took me by surprise what i thought to be dangerous, on the verge of a smile turning out to be nothing more than hiss and overdrive and there is nothing or noone more powerful and the light that shines upon you says the same when i wake up i'm doing a somersault for the ones who never dared to speak my name i am shy and mysterious when i say my goodbyes when i part with the ones i've come to love throughout my life

when the times are miracelous, when i stop to think twice when i sleep in the bushes next to where the treasure lies with a devil in the words that you speak to me when there's nothing left and we are at the end in the heavens you laugh at me secretly where it echoes over and over again

and the light that shines upon you says the same
for the ones who never dared to speak my name
