She commits treason with poise and precision.
She uses passion as an excuse for arson.
She could make millions on the words we had written
but she'd rather let them burn.

She's found a new one.

She commits murder with sweet inspiration.
She uses her tongue as the deadliest weapon.
She could kill millions with her lips laced in poison
but she'd rather let them burn.

She'll set this town ablaze, again.
She'll lay him down where we once did.
And now her hand's entwined with his.
He'll burn so bright, He'll burn out fast.

He learns the lesson of despair and deception.
He is the victim of crimes of decision.
He could escape without complication
but he'd rather stay and burn.

It's too late. Its far too late for him

She set the town ablaze, again.
She laid him down where we once did.
Her tongue is so entwined with his.
They burned so bright but he burned out fast.
