Wild haired man throws shoulder to hypocrisy.
No need to ask him where his allegiances lie.
Don't get too close, he's bought a river that's run dry.

In walks a girl and she's talkin' about a miracle.
Says she saw the light and she thinks you should too.
She's got her life straight...guess who's askin' about you?

And through your welling eyes,
Can you make it out?
High against the moon,
It's a lover's heart shattered against a canvas sleeve.

Too many days have passed,
Since you finally said, "I do".
Don't let your mind lose track if it hasn't yet,
Etch my words in time.

In comes a girl and she's talking revelation now.
The light she saw was a reflection of hope.
She claims she's sorry that you fell too fast into her hold.
She pulled you down and left you home.

And so it goes to prove,
Words could mean so much as to bring you in.
Believing all the world's stories as they are told.
So if you'd asked me,
Well I really can't say I do.
For there's a faith in my world today,
Breathing its mist on my pane,
And it's waiting there to enter my veins,
Where he calls home.
