"Indian Rain"

Clouds roll under thunder, skies swell to the cold Indian rain hides my teardrops. how many rainbows can you hold?
why do we always question the innocence of home?
all the while they hold my boundaries, makin my way across your plain. wide awake come Monday morning, clouded images on hold feeling the scrapes from other torment, facing the day across the grain

I see you've made the race, welcome to the room a name without a face to hide within the womb you've waited all of this time and followed me through my years and now a guest in my place, i'll promise you the moon though your body may be cold, burning fast is your soul rest assured you're not alone, never try this on your own.

I see it in the eyes of people. that walk past me everyday all the while they're cold, they just turn away somewhere out on the ocean, the sea that keeps the stars in the sky (we're) all alone and time before time, we were amazed by what we've done no thoughts will come over you, or make you feel inclined to make changes to better you, just look away

Didn't i tell you i was part in that? just another enigma in Friday's sobriquet a stranger in waiting, tomorrow's letters kept didn't i tell you i never knew her name

I see you've joined the race welcome to the room a name without a place to hide within the womb you've waited all of this time I've followed you through the years

and now my time has come to introduce the moon

Hear the cries across the counties, calling children to their homes
Indian rain they hide the teardrops, of every warrior that comes home wide awake on Sunday morning, to witness their arms stretched as one towards the heavens they lift their teardrops, sending one of the family to her grave

Did you ever think to call, before closing the gate? and now you land on my door shedding your light on my doorway, and locking away my tears
wash away my tears you've got them thinking you were a star, the one god had sent to you promising them a better way.
Shine your light on my doorway, and make better all
the years
with one touch of yours.
