woke to a voice it was distand, but distinct it called my name twice for an instant, I think I rose from my sleep as water might flow lurked in the shadows I was moving so slow it called me not by earthly name it knew my trespasses and shame it sweetly sang to me a song I thought it'd last forever long caught in the light taking my breath
it came for my life
the one after death Oh the night is so cold the day is dry and dead felt the flow on my skin "Welcome," is all he it said so fetch the pitcher by the bed pour it slowly on my head and rid my mind of idle thoughts I thank him for what he has brought justly so
justly so
