once upon a time
I was feeling fine I was in my youth's prime and there was nothing I could do but hang loose and let the world take me places I have never seen nobody told me what to do nobody told me what to dreams these days consist mostly of you and me we run from place to place and seamlessly we end up where we started that night and just a quick glance from across the room was enough to send me to the moon still my body aches [and] still my body aches and still my body aches from the time I was doing pushups and situps, I figured I had to be strong for you guys in case anything happened and I was left to take care of you all I exhausted myself to my tireless effort of being a good man

I was afraid, I was petrified and the days grew darker, longer and all my body prevail it sends shivers down my spine, to think that I'd someday someday I'd grow weary of this life this life that sometimes feels like a big fucking joke where death was a final punchline that everybody waited for but I'm not ready yet, I have a new vigour and I intend to see this life through to to the end, my friend

oooo...
