Adrian, don't you understand?

Fools like us are always dreaming

And when you go to bed

And cover up your head

It's better if you try to stop remembering

And the world is slowly dawning

To wake up to a new clear morning

Some of them just half your age

Get written off, page by page...

Adrian, don't you understand?

Fools like us are always dreaming

And when you go to bed

And cover up your head

It's better if you try to stop remembering

Some of them just half your age

And the world is softly sleeping

While your fears are in their keeping

All the planet's making haste

To blow to bits in outer space...

Adrian, don't you understand
