you used to call me different like there was something wrong
a vanishing of reason a soon forgotten song you used to call me special when i was very small but now i'm old i should have known you don't call me any more and every day you turn away from everything you know and every night you fade your light soon you won't know where to go

angels calling at my door
i don't know what scares me more going where they call me to or staying on this world with you you used to call me baby but now i'm fully grown now you're old your eyes are cold and you are so alone you don't believe your visions you don't believe your son you don't believe in anything but what your hands have done and every day you turn away from everything you've heard and every night you close your eyes and hide your face from every word

don't you here my gentle voice i'm calling your name only just a whisper but you know what i'm saying you are worth so much to me much more than you know all you've got to do is choose the way that you go and when you're lost in me i will be found in you and when i'm found in you the truth will set you free don't you be so terrified i'll do you no wrong i don't want to crucify but help you along you've been losing out on so much more than you know you've been choosing dangerous paths instead of my road
