this boy i know, he has a heart of glass it is gold inside but it has crystalized it is beautiful but in it's tragedy it is hard to hold without shattering he calls himself at night, in soft overchords keeps coming back to it his voice in echo chords till the sound's so thick it turns the sky to smoke and the greyest days the predictions told but this boy I know, he is pure of soul just get's lost sometimes in his chemicals under a coat of night, it's oh-so-comforting and that first breaking light becomes his enemy he calls so late tonight, it is 4 a.m. he is drunk, he can't find his apartment I don't like how it feels when i think of him all hooded in black, lost and stumbling the days start to fade out of the frame like their blurring into to someone else's name you try your hardest to rewind the tapes but you're prepared everyday to make the same mistakes step out of that life

it's nowhere near your time just remember you called it all bullshit well, it is and if you stop giving into it you can walk away the freest man this boy i know lives in a bell jar it is balancing up on it's pedestal he tries not to upset the weight of conscience afraid it's so far to fall if no one catches him but I've been there too, and I swear to god if I can help you, please, you've got to tell me how I know you've been away, and it can break you down and I don't want you gone all the cracks you see can be repaired and if you start to fall, we will be there don't drown yourself in all your old regrets because that heavyness will steal away your breath

and don't forget that you called it all bullshit well it still is and if you stop giving into it you will walk away the freest man shake your head loosen that grip
raise up your fist
you are the freest man
open your mouth
scream it out loud forget all your doubts
