Emerald" by Thin Lizzy

Down from the glen came the marching men with their shields and their swords

To fight the fight they believed to be right overthrow the overlords

To the towns where there was plenty they brought plunder, swords and flame

When they left the town was empty and children would never play again from their graves I heard them falling above the battle cry

By the bridge near the border

there were many born to die

Then onward, over the mountain and outward towards the sea

They come to claim the Emerald without it they could not leave
