

Today the Moon, Tomorrow the Sun "The Lightning Exhibit"

I'll kiss you tight and hold you soft Dig a hole to fill with light

When lightning strikes your head, and it's distracting you to death i'll throw my arms right around you make myself your own worn bed to comfort and forgive for the lives we can't relive
I want you over me I want you to Announce to the streets

There's always something here to fear
These worries we're meant to defeat Please lend me your ears
It's not always a winner's feat
It's not always a loser's streak
I know it's never too clear But we've got to stay near

Let's let this go lightly
Let's let this go

I've choked on my words again,
But I will survive them I've splintered at the seams breaking stilled horizons all my sparks they came from stone my love, it's our own you remind me of all the ones we've loved it reminds me of
