How strange I never noticed
Your eyes or the color of your hair
It seems to me you grow more beautiful
In every way with every single passing day

Love crept in unseen, found me wanting
I didn't even have the sense to know
What I was missing, or what I was son to feel

For you, the laughter, you, a reason to live
You, the object of all the love I can give
And all that I possess
You, who meant nothing when I was younger

It seems a memory from another life
Did you ever think we'd meet this way
Feel this way
Did you really even care?

Some changes I foresaw, but not this one
This feeling I would not have understood
Strange to think, I might have lived my whole life

Without you, the laughter, you, a reason to live
You, the object of all the love I can give
And all that I possess
You, who meant nothing when I was younger
