Has it occurred to you that this is all you've ever had A world created by perception?
Have you yet thought it through the things you see as good and bad
Are nothing more than learned projections recollections, childhood

We're thinking so high
We're guessing the answers
Are somewhere we can find

And as the seasons go by
And asking brings more questions
Questions bring more light

Is all we ever do determined by what You've foreseen?
Are we bound by predestination?
Are You becoming who we've all assumed You've always been?
Are You bound by Your own creation or the nations of philosophers?

We're thinking so high
And I'm guessing the answers
Are somewhere we can find

And as the seasons go by
And asking brings more questions
Questions bring more light

As we look up and wonder
As we see Jesus, God's reply
Find the answers in the Son

But that don't end the questions
It gives them meaning, gives them light
I won't stop asking till the kingdom has come

A question's all we've ever had
A question's all we've ever had
Oh yeah, yeah, oh yeah
