Of all the ways to leave a lover we chose the worst one, I bet No chance to hide or run for cover assassinated instead

Taking the wrong turn, we're too far gone now that our blue turns to grey I brought the strings and you played a last song then I took the train the next day

When you called me on the phone said you gotta be on your own but I still thought I'd be coming home

We went for a walk in the evening twilight
Just like we did it before Making plans for a future so bright unwary on that score

Waiting for hours at the railway station lighting a candle for you But while listening to your explanation
I realize that we're through

The two dragons on the wall have gone the heart-shaped picture that he'd drawn Back in the wasteland of a dawn

So long ago in Kernow on a full moon's night
A promise made under the silver starlight...
