Spent the day chasing floaters that travel 'round my eye Some escaped into the ground, others ran into the sky

So I left and I followed one, a very indistinct path
It showed me open windows, but I could not find the math to pass through any Too bad, for I glimpsed what I might find Something else, unpredicted by my calculating mind

No invisibility is conceivable just yet Pretend it never happened, so much easier to forget And focus on distractions, the illusion of control
The comfort of assumptions, make believe I've seen the whole

But the call, it is relentless, voices from the other side
You can kind of fool yourself, but impossible to hide

It'll get you in the end, caught in either life or death
And you just may realize, as you draw that final breath, that the end is nowhere near And escape cannot be found by departing this here life or abandoning the ground

In death, as you find right now, false promises can't compare You cross over that river and find yourself waiting there

So keep on chasing floaters Trust your instinct once again
The unexplored horizons, answers, questions lie within
