I've lived inside my head or in an ivory tower and looking out that life I looked from deep within a cloud I walked along the street and never saw a face I stayed away from truth because the truth was very hard to take

All the loneliness, all the torture I would tell myself "there but for fortune"

But I have loved and lost I have cried alone
I am every man and I know
We are all the same

The walls are falling down we feel the wind of change we try to stay divided but the world gets in the way and those who have too much maybe they don't have enough if they are so apart from life that they're too scared to open up

All the emptiness, all the hate and lies they will tell themselves "there but fate go I" they may never know they are part of us they may tell each other they are not the same but as the rivers rise they will realise
we are all the same

When we sing and cry, when we live and die
I am you, they are us, we are all the same in south Africa, Amazonia, when we hope, when we dream

Look across the earth and see a stranger look again and he will call your name cause sooner or later in this little world

I cannot understand: when we are all the same why do we see the differences, why do we separate?
We don't know who we are and so we are afraid Believing we are masters but suspecting we are slaves But sure as the rivers rise we will realise
