If love is real, why can't you take love and lock love away

In some safe place, where you won't lose love, and keep love

Each day, untouched, so warm and near, where love will stay, so pure and clear

The evenings pass, I wonder where you are sleeping tonight

Are you awake, running through memories, remembering

How good it felt when love took hold of future plans that won't unfold

Now days along, just patches of time thrown together Like clouds of empty hours, blinded by pictures of places

We knew and now, in space I stare, without your soul and voice to share

It all seems lost, left are just words, but without much to say

'Cause if love's real, you have to trust and let love go its way
