the sun makes you sway
as you walk through the class and you take your seat next to the board the world is un-paused as the silence withdraws with the muffled laughter from the hall fifteen eyes stare at the mat in your hair and the eyeliner smudged on your cheek whispering peaks when you yawn at the speech by the teacher and the student counselor yesterday lingers on to your voice

please you say
we haven't got all day
your point has been made

nothing stays
exactly the same
we're shaped out of the air

in time we'll all
return as stars
and your lectures transform into poems

you pull back your hair when you rise from the chair and you walk to the door with a smile it's not to rebel you don't want what they sell and the world outside wont notice anyway

like a sand mandala blown out of time we will unite in the holy unknown
