"my mommy always said there were no monsters, no real ones...but there are" no lilypads for mommy the jaws that dragged you down and as you blew your life away were you surprised he'd been around?

the marks of Camels and cowboys circles of your pain and as he beat your life away were you surprised he bore her name?

he's what you know
he's what you fear
who needs hell when he's already here

he's not where you think in your closet beneath your bed when you see through the lies that they've always said because the lights won't chase him and the covers won't save you by the time you see his face he's already got you

hush little baby don't you cry momma's gonna sing you a lullaby

gunshot ripped through your playground screaming as you fall and as you bled your life away were you surprised he was so small?

he's already got you

sometimes grownups even fear his name as your sickness grows and as they blame your life away were you surprised he killed so slow?

he's twisted, burning metal he's cold, deep water he's a tightly clenched fist he's a bullet, he's your mother he's an animal, he is fire he is hunger, he's disease he is always the last thing that a child ever sees monster!

monster!
mommy!"
