

The Tear Garden

"Déjà Vu"

It was a cold November evening and I should have worn a coat.

I shivered, waiting for the ferry boat to carry me to you.

Could see you dancing in the harbour lights; your hair
an orange flame.

You'd turn away, swing on a crane.

Always quite the same...

The same! The same!

It's always quite the same.

Rewind! Re-live it all again and again.

You'd tiptoe halfway across a rooftop, drop headfirst in the river.

You'd stretch out for a helping hand and once again I'd stand there, not close enough to touch, but I heard you call my name as you died.

And the ferry boat? It never did arrive...
