People who use the word literally wrong.
Like my junior year history teacher. He always said stupid stuff like "the world literally turned upside down" and I wanted to stand up in class and scream HOW THE HELL DID THAT HAPPEN?? You'd need a big fucking crane to turn the world literally upside down!! Or he'd say their head literally exploded with rage. Wow I'd like to see that someday at the mall.
Do people just not understand how this word is meant? Literally, it means they literally did it as in it actually happened. Real, not figurative. I think he meant figuratively. I wanted to stand up and literally shake his little head off. Kinda like a squishy banana. Squishy bananas really suck. I would always get excited when my mom would make me a lunch and I'd discover the bananas were squishy. I didn't want to eat that. Gross. Especially if it's squished all over my sandwich. That's nasty. That literally grossed me out. And sometimes when I'd take these squishy bananas home to throw them in the trash I'd discover the cat had knocked over the trash and threw it everywhere and then the dogs would get into the pantyliners and chew them up and throw them in with the clean laundry. And I had to spank my cat because he's a bad kitty. Bad kitty, bad! You are literally a bad, bad kitty. That's what I'd say 'cause I know how to use the word literally correctly.
