the wax paper that i taped over the windows melted as quick as chocolate in the heat and it'll probably never come off now the windows look like frosted glass if you see them from the street and the dim light that filters through casts a new light on you it makes me get all misty because i remember something and then i see your shadow and i, i wanna follow you all the way down this time i want to see what it is you're going down for i, i want you more than i want anything i want you the way you were you were lying in the moonlight outside in the grass when i heard an animal voice somewhere in the dark and i saw a wing shadow pass and just then the gleam in your eye made my blood freeze there was something up above us rustling in the branches of the trees and i, i pressed up against you again i could hear your heartbeat steady, and hard, and pure i used to love you so much that i was sure it would kill me and i want you the way you were
