Tonight I'm drinking away your memory And what everyone else fails to see is that these bottles can become razor blades You can use them to drag across your veins as a cry for help

But I'm through holding on So just crush those thoughts And my arms feel more empty than heavy That's just the drug in your drink and thinking back, this was the least I could have done

You can take my heart you can break my arms you can even have my eyes but you will never have it all at least not while I'm alive.

But I have hopes for a new start With these dividing lines between us still I need more than just miles
I need something I can grab Something I can hold in one hand and use to swing like hell

Is it in the air?
Or just the water you drank?
Can you feel your eyes becoming heavy as I think What have I done?

But I know this all will turn out right right as rain, right as rain comes down on us.
