Strawberry Road" by Sam Phillips shotgun alleys with lightning flowers under the eyes of fallen statues dry blood they've never seen pain is sharper when i suspect that the true love runs looking for us like a lion in our dreams the strawberry road

where the dream fades is down between our longing and desires

where our hearts break into love you censor longing and organize beauty because you're afraid you want it more than oxygen or light you can't get there with your morals or without love

lie down with me

the rules aren't always right call it romance or nostalgia this hunger behind our memories we've buried it in code the things we've wanted when we get them are never enough never what they seem but they lead us to the road
